The most ancient tomb of a Mayan governor

Archaeologists discovered the grave of a Mayan governor in the archaeological place Peru-Waká, located to the north of the country. It might belong to the famous king Te' Chan Ahk, One of the first royal dynasties maya known, the WAK. This was established in the II century A.D. Identify the tomb as belonging to a monarch was possible thanks to the jade mask placed on the head of the man and intended to represent him as the god of corn, as was usual among the Mayan kings.

“The classic Mayan were venerating its divine leaders and were treating them after its death like living souls”, told David Freidel, teacher of anthropology.

In addition to the mask of the governor, in the archaeological place there were discovered 22 receptacles of ceramics, conches of spondylus, adornments of jade and a pendant of conches carved in the shape of crocodile.
